

DISSENTING OPINION OF JUDGE ad-hoc PIER PAOLO PASCERI SCARAMUZZA

In the Case of Ríos et al. v. the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

With the permission of the opinion of the majority of my colleagues, I, Pier Paolo Pasceri S., Judge ad-hoc of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, regret to dissent from the judgment for having a different criterion as to the grounds and the operative paragraphs exposed therein (except for operative paragraphs 1 of the decision)¹ and therefore I am unable to join the decision adopted by the majority of the judges of this Court, whose favorable opinions adopted the judgment on the merits as to the remaining issues that formed part of the decision from which I dissent today. In that sense, I shall now present the grounds in the following way:

I do not agree with foregoing judgment since, in my opinion, there are procedural and substantive reasons that must be observed:

1) Procedural reasons:

The procedural reasons are related to the objection of non-exhaustion of domestic remedies that was not decided but until the date the judgment was delivered, and was dismissed by the sentencing majority. In my opinion, said objection should have been admitted in light of the claims contained in the application filed by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and as a consequence, regarding the petitions contained in the autonomous brief of the alleged victims.

In early stages of this case, it was alleged by the Commission (and reiterated before this Court), the existence of domestic remedies. Therefore, in folio 394 of the file of evidences, volume 2, brief presented by the Venezuelan State Agent for Human Rights, which pointed that: "...Exhausted as there are the first legal resources of the cases pointed previously, the petitioners will have a second resource to which they can resort, also to a series of extraordinary resources as Casación, Constitutional Amparo: Autonomous, Sobrevenido, Joint, Habeas Data or Habeas Corpus, Invalidation, Constitutional Revision, Nullity resource; which they have not exhausted yet..."

Even when who undersigns affirms that the legal actions do not result coherent or sufficient to satisfy the pretensions of this Court as analyzed infra, it should be remembered that the same State Agent pointed in said brief that: "On the other hand,

¹ Regarding the decision on the "prejudice in the roles played by some judges of the Court", the reason why I agree with the solution provided to this problem was mentioned in the decision that, in that moment, became final. To accept that, on this occasion, that there is a possibility of reanalyzing the decision, would imply to modify or eliminate the effect of a former adjudication that resulted from the Decision of October 18, 2007 made by the judges that, at that time, composed the Court (page 1103 of the records on the merits); which, in light of the terms of Article 29 (3) of the Rules of Procedure of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, may not be contested Article 29. Decisions.

1. The judgments and orders for discontinuance of a case shall be rendered exclusively by the Court.
2. All other orders shall be rendered by the Court if it is sitting and by the President if it is not, unless otherwise provided. Decisions of the President that are not purely procedural may be appealed before the Court.
3. Judgments and orders of the Court may not be contested in any way.

points who undersignes, from the several facts denounced to the Public Ministry, consisting on verbal agressions, difamation, insult, which are not facts that should have been denounced to said organ, as the petitioners did; because when responding to such illicit private acts, the legal remedie is to present it to the legal court competent by territory, which they have not even done – as a legal domestic resource-”.

From the above said, it is evident that from the beginning, the exhaustion of domestic remedies constituted a defense of the State in which they pointed that, not only have not been exhausted all domestic remedies, but it added that there were other legal resources; this defense was in its opportunity dismissed by the Commission and was again alleged before this Court, and as recorded on the order I dissent, it was dismissed again. In this sense, the judgment I dissent pronounces anticipatedlly on matter that should be decided by Venezuelan jurisdictional organs. Therefore, the request presented before this Court should have been declared inadmissible from the beginning, or before declaring on the Merits of the case, and consequently declare it closed.

The foregoing consideration is based on the following reasons:

1.1. On Consistency

I understand that there are actions, petitions or remedies within the Venezuelan legislation that could still settle and satisfy, eventually, the same claims put forward before this international instance (contained in the application filed by the Commission or in its autonomous brief), to which the petitioners did not resort.

It spring from the reading of the application filed by the Commission- and similarly, from the autonomous brief containing the requests ²-, that, in accordance with the

² In fact, it was put forward in the autonomous brief of requests of the alleged victims that:

"1) The Venezuelan State has violated the right to humane treatment enshrined in Article 5.1 of the American Convention of Human Rights, in relation to its obligation to respect and guarantee the human rights established in Article 1.1 regarding:

a. Mental integrity: ...omissis...

b. B. physical integrity omissis ...

And that for these violations, the State is held internationally responsable.

2) The Venezuelan State has violated the right to freedom of thought and expression enshrined in Article 13 of the American Convention of Human Rights, in relation to its obligation to respect and guarantee the human rights established in Article 1(1) and that it is held internationally responsible for such violation.

3) The Venezuelan State has violated the right to property enshrined in Article 21 of the American Convention of Human Rights, in relation to its obligation to respect and guarantee the human rights established in Article 1(1) and that it is held internationally responsible for such violation.

4) The Venezuelan State has violated the right to a fair trial and judicial protection enshrined in Articles 8 and 25 of the American Convention of Human Rights, in relation to its obligation to respect and guarantee the human rights established in Article 1(1) and that it is held internationally responsible for such violation.

As a consequence, in light of the violations declared and after the adjudication of international responsibility of the Venezuelan State for such violations, the State is required to adopt the following measures of reparations for the victims:

claims made before this Court, it was requested to hold the Venezuelan State responsible for:

- Violation of the right to freedom of expression (Article 13 of the American Convention)
- Violation to the judicial guarantees and judicial protection (Articles 8(1) and 25 of the American Convention) in relation to the obligation to respect and guarantee human rights, enshrined in Article 1(1) thereof.
- Violation (regarding José Antonio Monroy, Armando Amaya y Carlos Colmenares), of the right to personal integrity enshrined in Article 5 of the American Convention, in relation to the obligation to respect and guarantee human rights, enshrined in Article 1(1) thereof.

And as a consequence, the Venezuelan State:

- Must adopt all the measures necessary to prevent actions by both state agents and private citizens that could hamper the seeking, receiving, and imparting of information by social communicators and support staff;
- Must adopt all the measures necessary to respond with due diligence whenever there are acts of State agents as well as private individuals that hamper the seeking, receiving, and imparting of information by social communicators and support staff.;

1. To adopt the measures necessary to stop and prevent those actions of officials or government agents as well as of private individuals that affect the personal integrity, that impede the search, access, expression and broadcasting of information or that affect the right to property of the alleged victims in the case at hand;

2. To adopt the measures necessary to deal with, promptly and effective, in protection of the victims, the situations in which the officials and state agents or private individuals caused an impairment to the personal integrity, that impede the search, access, expression and broadcasting of information or that affect the right to property of the victims in this case.

3. To adopt the measures necessary to carry out a serious, thorough and complete investigation to determine the responsible of the violations mentioned in this proceeding and, once the alleged responsible are identified, to subject them to due process in order to determine the legal responsibility.

4. The result of such investigations must be made public and the Venezuelan State must publicly recognize the international responsibility by means of the publication in a national newspaper of whatever judgment this Tribunal may render;

5. To issue a strong condemnation of the attacks to which the victims have been subjected in the instant case, from its highest level and to adopt a conduct that promotes the respect for freedom of expression, tolerance and dissident opinions and positions;

6. To publish the most relevant parts of whatever judgment on merits the Court may hand down, in a newspaper of national circulation during the time the Court deems appropriate and to publish the entire text of the judgment in the official gazette of the State;

7. To freely provide, through national health centers, the appropriate treatment required by the victims of this case, prior statement of their consent to such effect, for the necessary time, including the provision of medicines;

8. To guarantee the equitable, fair and free access to information and news, without the imposition of discretionary and arbitrary conditions;

9. To adopt the legislative measures and of whatever kind that are necessary to fully ensure the exercise of the freedom of expression and information;

10. To pay the victims identified in this case, the compensations that may correspond for the pecuniary and moral damage caused to them; and

11. To pay the legal costs and expenses incurred during the processing of this case, both at the domestic level and at the Inter-American system for the protection of Human Rights". The emphasis is mine.

- Must guarantee (regarding Luisiana Ríos, Luis Augusto Contreras Alvarado, Eduardo Sapene Granier, Javier García, Isnardo Bravo, David Pérez Hansen, Wilmer Marcano, Winston Gutiérrez, Isabel Mavarez, Erika Paz, Samuel Sotomayor, Anahís Cruz, Herbigio Henríquez, Armando Amaya, Antonio José Monroy, Laura Castellanos, Argenis Uribe, Pedro Nikken, Noé Pernía and Carlos Colmenares) the exercise of the right to freedom of thought and expression, particularly in the exercise of their work.

- Must repair the pecuniary and non-pecuniary damages caused to the victims (a los señores Luisiana Ríos; Luis Augusto Contreras Alvarado; Eduardo Sapene Granier; Javier García; Isnardo Bravo; David Pérez Hansen; Wilmer Marcano; Winston Gutiérrez, Isabel Mavarez, Erika Paz, Samuel Sotomayor, Anahís Cruz, Herbigio Henríquez, Armando Amaya, Antonio José Monroy, Laura Castellanos, Argenis Uribe, Pedro Nikken, Noé Pernía and Carlos Colmenares) by the acts of State authorities; and

- Must pay the costs and expenses incurred in the processing of the case both at the national level and the expenses derived from the processing of the case before the Inter-American system.

In keeping with my opinion and by way of example, it should be emphasized that there is an appropriate action within the Venezuelan legal system for the autonomous protection of constitutional rights, which has a similar regulation under the American Convention on Human Rights, such as the right to freedom of expression, enshrined in Article 57 of the Constitution of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela (hereinafter, CBRV), right to defense and due process (or which is the same, right to a fair trial and judicial protection) established in Articles 26 and 49 of the CBRV, right to humane treatment, established in Article 46 of the CBRV; the appropriate action is the action for the protection of constitutional rights or also called constitutional amparo set forth in Article 27 of the CBRV , which was developed in the Organic Law of Amparo of Constitutional Rights and Guarantees and in some binding judgments of the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice, which could have been an effective remedy in Venezuela if immediately or directly taken, for the case there were no regular actions capable of protecting the persons demanding justice within the Venezuelan legal system.

It spring from the court records followed before this Court that no action for constitutional amparo was lodged in order to protect or reestablish the rights allegedly violated or threatened to be violated, which are enshrined and regulated, in a similar way, under the American Convention on Human Rights, as previously discussed.

Moreover, it should be mentioned that a possible decision of amparo could have satisfied some or all the claims contained in the petition which were transcribed supra- and that, in a similar and expanded way, were requested by the alleged victims in its autonomous brief- for example, by ordering the adoption of those measures necessary to prevent that actions of the State's agents as well as of private individuals from keep hindering the search, reception and dissemination of information urging the law enforcement personnel to take specific steps to avoid the repetition of events such as these; or by guaranteeing the identified petitioners the exercise of the right to freedom of thought and expression; specially , the exercise of their profession; or by ordering, as an example of an action for amparo against judgments or against the omission of actions, an impartial and thorough investigation in order to prosecute and punish all the responsible for the facts mentioned in the complaint.

Moreover, outside the framework of the constitutional law but within the scope of Venezuelan administrative proceedings, it is worth mentioning that administrative courts do not only hear about statements of the government (of administrative acts, administrative contracts) but it also hear about the omissions or deficiency (of public utilities for instance) as well as about the control over de facto proceedings or material or ordinary behavior of the administration itself, having constitutional authority (Article 259 of the CBRV)³ to order the necessary measures to restore the subjective legal situations harmed by administrative actions .

Progressively, the judicial protection the Venezuelan State was providing by means of its judiciary, regarding these last proceedings (de facto proceedings or material or ordinary proceedings) was formally and positively provided for in the Venezuelan legislation inasmuch as it enshrined the possibility for administrative courts to hear about claims against de facto proceedings attributable to organs of the National Executive branch and other national high-ranking authorities that exercise the Public Power (Article 5 (27), consistent with the first paragraph of the same Article, all of them of the Organic Law of the Supreme Tribunal of Justice of Venezuela). It follows that claims tending to control the de facto proceedings that may have conducted the organs of the Executive and other national high-rank authorities exercising the public power, might have been lodged and processed by means of this action stipulated in the domestic legislation.

Moreover, by way of example, the pecuniary claims contained in the autonomous brief of requests, pleadings and evidence of the victims (page 652, of the measures of full reparation requested by the victims that were included in numeral 11), lodged with this Court, should have been referred to by means of the specific action that exists within the Venezuelan legislation, which is, that of pecuniary claims against the Republic, with all the requirements that such action implies (Article 5, numeral 24, consistent with the first paragraph of the same Article, all of them of the Organic Law of the Supreme Tribunal of Justice of Venezuela.)⁴

In view of the fact that all of the foregoing is by no means intended to be exhaustive in relation to the possibilities existing within the Venezuelan domestic legislation, I must point out that there are, apart from said actions, other remedies within the Venezuelan criminal jurisdiction, which, as has been alleged by the Venezuelan

³ Article 259. The administrative and adjudicatory jurisdiction corresponds to the Supreme Court of Justice and other courts determined by law. The administrative organs have the authority to annul the general or individual administrative acts that are contrary to law, even because of misuse of power; condemn the payment of sums of money and the reparation of damages originated under the responsibility of the Administration; hear about claims in relation to public utilities and order the necessary measures to restore the subjective legal situations impaired by the administrative actions.

⁴ Article 5

" The competences of Supreme Tribunal of Justice, as the highest Tribunal of the Republic are:

24. To know the demands proposed against the Republic, States, Municipalities or any Autonomous Institute, Public Entity or Company in which the Republic exerts a decisive and permanent control in terms of direction or administration, if its value exceeds the 70,001 tax unit)

The Tribunal shall hear in its Plenary Division the matters referred to in this Article, numerals 1 to 2. The Constitutional Division shall hear the matters provided for in numerals 3 to 23. The Political Administrative Division shall hear the matters provided for in numerals 24 to 37. The Penal Cassation Division shall hear the matters provided for in numerals 38 to 40. The Civil Cassation Division shall hear the matter provided for in numerals 41 to 42. The Social Cassation Division shall hear the matters provided for in numerals 43 to 44. The Electoral Division shall hear the matters provided for in numerals 45 and 46. State, were not fully exhausted. A brief comment regarding such remedies will be made below.

The domestic remedies described, in the opinion of the undersigned, comply with the requirements of the Convention, according to which States Parties have the obligation to provide effective legal remedies to the alleged victims of human rights violations (Article 25), and to substantiate such remedies pursuant to the rules of due process of law (Article 8(1)), all of that in accordance with the general obligation of States Parties to ensure to all persons subject to their jurisdiction the free and full exercise of the rights enshrined in the Convention (Article 1(1)).

It spring from the court records followed before this Court, when compared to the what has been alleged herein, that the alleged victims did not effectively exhaust those remedies tending to the protection of human rights, the reparation of damage, among other things, provided for by domestic law, which under the terms of Articles 46(a) and 47 of the American Convention on Human Rights (1969)⁵, constitute grounds of inadmissibility, which in my opinion, was an issue of international public law verifiable, even unofficially, by the Commission⁶ or the Court, even when, as has been mentioned, this preliminary objection was initially raised by the Venezuelan State before this Court at the moment of answering the application.

It is then that only upon the exhaustion of these remedies (and bearing in mind the proper consistency and connection that must exist between the petition made before the domestic courts and the petition that should be made before the Commission and this Court) the parties shall be able to resort to the Inter-American system of protection or, failing that, to prove that the remedies are ineffective and inoperative to solve the issue at stake.

In other words, the petition lodged before this Inter-American system for the protection of human rights must be closely related to the remedies exhausted at the domestic level in order to verify, among other things, the suitability of the proceeding chosen to protect, at the international level, the situation reported to be violated, as well as the proper exhaustion of domestic remedies, all this to give the State the possibility of not only examining and determining, by means of the domestic remedies, the case but also repairing the damage probable caused. The international jurisdiction is of a subsidiary, reinforcing and complementary⁷ nature.

⁵ Article 46 1. Admission by the Commission of a petition or communication lodged in accordance with Articles 44 or 45 shall be subject to the following requirements: that the remedies under domestic law have been pursued and exhausted in accordance with generally recognized principles of international law; (...)

Article 47 The Commission shall consider inadmissible any petition or communication submitted under Articles 44 or 45 if: a) any of the requirements indicated in Article 46 has not been met; (...)

Advisory Opinion OC-2/82 of September 24, 1982, Series A No. 2, para. 31; The Word "Laws" in Article 30 of the American Convention on Human Rights. Advisory Opinion

There is no evidence in the court records showing that the remedies mentioned supra (or some other recourse that may exist) were filed or whether they were effective within the domestic courts; no reason was given about why such remedies were not filed, in accordance with the requirement stipulated in Article 46(2)(a), (b), (c) of the Convention; as a result, the Commission, in my opinion, had to examine the reasonings about the exhaustion of the domestic remedies and come to the conclusion that the petition filed before it should be declared to be inadmissible.

This Court has ruled upon, on several occasions, on the procedural opportunity to determine about a ground of inadmissibility as the one put forward by the State and the Court has pointed out it may decide on the objection prior to the judgment on the merits⁸ or as a preliminary phase, in the judgment that finally settles the controversy.⁹

In the case at hand, the petitioners alleged to have exhausted the domestic remedies by means of complaints filed before the Attorney General's Office and some proceedings instituted before the criminal courts, which, I insist, are not consistent with the legal claims lodged before this Court.¹⁰

In fact, the criminal court exercising criminal jurisdiction in Venezuela (and not acting as constitutional court) within the sphere of its authorities, could not rule upon the violation of freedom of expression (as has been one of the decisions of this Court) or order measures necessary to avoid acts of State's agents and private individuals tending to hamper the seeking, reception and dissemination of information by mass media and associated personnel; or require measures necessary to prevent that acts of State's agents or private individuals hinder the seeking, reception and dissemination of information or guarantee the exercise of the right to freedom of expression and thought, particularly, the exercise of the profession of the petitioners. The majority has an opinion different to what I put forward herein as has been read from the operative paragraphs of the judgment and paragraph 300 thereof. These claims, as we saw, are protected by other remedies that were not exhausted.

The foregoing shows sufficient reasons to dissent from the majority opinion.

1.2 On the procedural moment to raise the objection

One of the reasons given by the majority of the judges to dismiss the objection of non-exhaustion of domestic remedies was that the State failed to point out the remedies that remained to be exhausted by the alleged victims and that it did not allege either, the lack of exhaustion of such remedies,¹¹ coming to the conclusion, in this way, that said preliminary objection was not raised but until the adoption of the Report on Admissibility by the Commission by means of a brief submitted during the stage of merits, substantiated before the Commission; therefore, the majority of the judges concluded that the State did not raise this objection at the appropriate procedural moment.

It is impossible to agree either on the procedural moment to raise the objection, though it seems this is an alternative criteria established in previous decisions¹², inasmuch as that would mean to accept that an State's agent may change, before the Commission or the Court, the terms under which the State (whichever state it is) accepted to become a member state to the American Convention on Human Rights. We understand that if the goal was to establish a preclusive opportunity to raise this objection, the text of the American Convention should expressly establish so. Nothing of the foregoing means that the purpose of the decision of the majority opinion regarding the preclusion effect of the terms was not understood, but that such terms should be expressly established.

It is evident how necessary is to count on procedural rules and to have those rules expressly and positively embodied, in order to establish the procedural cases and the consequences that a State may hypothetically face: Untimely presentation of arguments related to international public law; express waiver of the right to invoke the non-exhaustion of domestic remedies; procedural opportunity and phase in which the objection of non-exhaustion of domestic remedies must be raised; possibility that the Commission eliminates this phase; obligation for the State

¹² Cases: A) Respondent State may expressly or impliedly waive the right to invoke this rule (Case of Castillo Páez, Preliminary Objections. Judgment of January 30, 1996. Series C No. 24, para. 40; Case of Loayza Tamayo; Preliminary Objections. Judgment of January 31, 1996. Series C No. 25, para. 40). B) the objection asserting non-exhaustion of domestic remedies, to be timely, must be made at an early stage of the proceedings or as has been established in subsequent judgments, the objection, to be timely, must be raised at the stage of admissibility of the case before the Commission, that is, before any consideration as to the merits; otherwise, the express waive of the right to invoke it shall be presumed by the party having the right to it (Case of Castillo Páez, Preliminary Objections. Ibid. page. 40; Case of Loayza Tamayo; Preliminary Objections. Ibid., para. 40; Case of Loayza Tamayo; Preliminary Objections. Judgment of September 4, 1998. Series C No. 41, para. 56). Case of Kimel, supra note 26, para. 49; Case of Herrera Ulloa, supra note 27, para. 81; Case of the Mayagna (Sumo) Awá Tingni Community. Preliminary Objections, supra note 29, para. 53. c) the State claiming non-exhaustion has an obligation to prove that domestic remedies remain to be exhausted and that they are effective (Case of Castillo Páez, Preliminary Objections. Ibid. para. 40; Case of Loayza Tamayo; Preliminary Objections. Ibid., para. 40; Case of Cantoral Benavidez; Preliminary Objections. Judgment of September 3, 1998. Series C No. 40, para. 31; Case of Durand and Ugarte, Preliminary Objections. Judgment of May 28, 1999. Series C No. 50, para. 33).

This criterion has been recently ratified in the following matters: Case of the Saramaka People V. Surinam. Preliminary Objections, Merits, Reparations and Legal Costs. Judgment of November 28, 2007. Series C No. 172, para. 43 and Case of Salvador Chiriboga V. Ecuador. Preliminary Objection and Merits. Judgment of May 6, 2008. Series C No. 179, para. 40.

invoking such objection to indicate the remedies that remain to exhaust, as well as to prove the effectiveness of such remedies.

There is no set of rules, in this sense, currently within the Inter-American system and in my opinion; they are rules of vital importance for the processing of those cases of a global nature, that the Commission as well as the Court, must hear, respectively; therefore, for what the law ought to be, the State Parties must approve a regulatory text, in the Protocol to the amendment of the procedural part of the American Convention on Human Rights or simply, amend Article 62 of the American Convention to regulate this aspect. That shall lead to the improvement of the Inter-American system for the Protection of Human Rights and shall ensure legal certainty and stability for the parties in the proceeding.

I insist, to accept that international courts may declare the untimeliness or express or implied waiver of the right to invoke objections that imply the analysis of rules of international public law, such as the example of exhaustion of domestic remedies, would cause a clear inequality between the parties who are settling their issues at the domestic level and those who, by not doing it, have direct access to international courts; resulting, maybe, in excessive work of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the procedural risk implied in bringing a case to the jurisdiction of an international court or considering, maybe, that the objection of exhaustion of domestic remedies has never been admitted by the Court due to, certainly, the lack of clarity with which this issue is embodied in the set of rules previously mentioned. This, coupled with an increase in the number of cases, would make of this Court, instead of a subsidiary tribunal, a main tribunal, and the problems that this implies.

It would seem that the case-by-case and particular solution of one or several international cases could generate a clear unbalance in domestic set of rules and a clear inequality among nations.

To my understanding, if a question of admissibility was decided before the Commission, that same question should be analyzed, once again, by the Court considering the judicial functions of this last body as opposed to the first one. This function is in line with the full jurisdiction the Court exercises over the decisions made by the Commission.¹³

This inherent power of exercising the jurisdiction in toto has been upheld by this Court in previous cases¹⁴ pointing out that the American Convention is drafted in broad terms which indicate that the Court exercises full jurisdiction over all the issues related to a case. This Tribunal is competent, therefore, to decide whether there has been a violation of any of the rights and liberties enshrined in the American Convention and to protect, by means of the appropriate measures, the consequences that derive from said situation; however, it is also competent to try the prerequisites on which the possibility to hear a case is based and to verify the

I believe that any decision delivered by this Court must be subsidiary to the system of justice of each State and the Court may only issue a ruling prior to a State's decision, if the ineffectiveness of the remedies was proven; which did not happen in the case at hand, consistent with the claims made before this Court, considering that such remedies were not lodged.

I hereby present my dissenting opinion for considering that there must be harmony among the Convention, the Rules of Procedure of the Commission and of the Court and the domestic set of rules of the defendant State, which I have tried, in my capacity as judge ad hoc, to bring to the attention of the Court's Judges in order for them to closely learn about the law enforced in the State under question and the practice developed by it, together with its standards, in order to bring it in line with the precepts of the American Convention.

2) Substantive reasons:

Even when technically it would not be necessary to carry out an analysis regarding the merits of the case at hand, I think it is appropriate to analyze them inasmuch as by dismissing the preliminary objection of exhaustion of domestic remedies, the Court pointed out:

"On the other hand, the Court estimates that a preliminary analysis on the effectiveness of the investigations on the facts presented in this case will implicate an evaluation on the acting of the State in relation to its obligation to guarantee the acknowledged rights in the American Convention, which violation is alleged, in particular through serious and effective investigations, matter that should be analyzed deeply in the controversy for which it considered pertinent to accumulate the exception requested by the State, and examine the arguments of the parties, when determining if the State is responsible for the violation of the Articles of the Convention allegedly violated."

It spring from the foregoing that according to the Court, the objection of non-exhaustion of domestic remedies was related to the merits; therefore, the Court analyzed it upon examining the alleged violation of the right to humane treatment and freedom of thought and expression.

Hence, even though in the operative paragraph of the judgment, the Court did not declare that the Venezuelan State failed to comply with the obligation established in Article 8¹⁶ of the Convention (right to a fair trial), the operative paragraph related to

¹⁶ Article 8 (Right to a Fair Trial)

1. Every person has the right to a hearing, with due guarantees and within a reasonable time, by a competent, independent, and impartial tribunal, previously established by law, in the substantiation of any accusation of a criminal nature made against him or for the determination of his rights and obligations of a civil, labor, fiscal, or any other nature.

the declaration of the State's responsibility for the non-compliance with the obligation contained in Article 1(1) ejusdem as to ensure the free exercise of the right to seek, receive and impart information and the right to humane treatment embodied in Articles 13(1) and 5(1) therein, is based on a line of argument that is connected by a common factor which is- according to the majority opinion- the ineffectiveness of the Venezuelan system of justice; from there, the connection of the procedural reasons to dissent from the majority opinion and the relevancy of these brief considerations as to the merits.

In fact, Chapter VIII of the text of the judgment is divided into three subchapters; the first one refers to the context of the facts reported and the declarations made by public officials; the second one refers to the facts that violated the personal integrity of the alleged victims and their right to freely seek, receive and impart information; and lastly, the third subchapter is related to the investigation into the facts.

It is noted in the first of the subchapters that:

a) the Court contextualizes the situation presented, pointing out that all the incidents of the case at hand occurred in an environment and during periods of strong bias and social and political conflict (paragraph 121 of the Judgment);

b) The Commission pointed out in the annual reports on the situation of human rights in Venezuela, adopted between 2003 and 2006, "the lack of investigation into the facts and noticed that, on several occasions, it requested the State the adoption of precautionary measures in order to protect the life, humane integrity and freedom of expression of reporters, cameramen and photographers". (Paragraph 122 of the Judgment) the emphasized part is mine.

c) It is expressly stated that it has not been proven the speeches analyzed in the judgment show or reveal, per se, the existence of a State's policy. Moreover, it was noted that no sufficient evidence was furnished proving that the actions or omissions carried out by state organs or structures, through which the public power is

2. Every person accused of a criminal offense has the right to be presumed innocent so long as his guilt has not been proven according to law. During the proceedings, every person is entitled, with full equality, to the following minimum guarantees:

- a. the right of the accused to be assisted without charge by a translator or interpreter, if he does not understand or does not speak the language of the tribunal or court;
- b. prior notification in detail to the accused of the charges against him;
- c. adequate time and means for the preparation of his defense;
- d. the right of the accused to defend himself personally or to be assisted by legal counsel of his own choosing, and to communicate freely and privately with his counsel;
- e. the inalienable right to be assisted by counsel provided by the state, paid or not as the domestic law provides, if the accused does not defend himself personally or engage his own counsel within the time period established by law;
- f. the right of the defense to examine witnesses present in the court and to obtain the appearance, as witnesses, of experts or other persons who may throw light on the facts;
- g. the right not to be compelled to be a witness against himself or to plead guilty; and
- h. the right to appeal the judgment to a higher court.

3. A confession of guilt by the accused shall be valid only if it is made without coercion of any kind.

4. An accused person acquitted by a nonappealable judgment shall not be subjected to a new trial for the same cause.

5. Criminal proceedings shall be public, except insofar as may be necessary to protect the interests of justice.

exercised, have been part of a State's policy ¹⁷ according to the terms alleged. (Paragraph 138 of the Judgment).

d) It determine that most of the statements made by state authorities are not in line with the State's obligation to ensure the right to humane treatment and the right to freely seek, receive and impart information and therefore, they could have had an intimidating effect on the victims (paragraph 149).

The judgment concludes that there is the possibility that the non contempt¹⁸ on the part of the authorities before the aggressive incidents committed by third parties, have led the alleged victims, employees of Globovisión, to a situation of greater vulnerability to perform their jobs, running the risk of suffering unfavorable consequences for their rights (paragraph 142 to 149).

From the three foregoing paragraphs, the undersigned notes that the causal link existing between the reported damage suffered by the alleged victims in some of the cases and the State's non-compliance of which the State was declared responsible, is weak or nonexistent, considering that it was impossible to determine, specifically, whether the statements placed the employees (reporters, photographers,

"...omissis... For this reason, the thought and expression of those who do critical reporting of the government enjoys broad protection under the Convention as far as they form part of the political debate of the society. Likewise, the democracy itself needs that the expression of the thought of those who are political figures or followers of the ruling party within the framework of this debate, enjoys equal protection ... omissis ... the Commission notes that most of the statements attached, in which the President, for example, refers to the private media as, inter alia, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse", "Fascists", who are doing a "terrorist campaign", who are organized against the government of Venezuela, against the People, the laws and the Republic, liars, evil and immoral people, golpistas and terrorists (supra para. 109) though they may have a strong and critical content that may be considered offensive, they constitute legitimate expressions of thoughts and opinions on the particular ways that the mass media may report, which are protected and guaranteed under Article 13 of the American Convention and the Commission does not find they constitute a violation of this treaty".

In similar terms, the report on the merits of the Commission in the case of "Gabriela Perozo et al. V. Venezuela," para. 176,177,180,181,139, analyzed the same statements in the case at hand:

"... omissis ... the Commission notes that most of the statements annexed, though they may have a strong and critical content constitute legitimate expressions of thought and opinions on the special methods that a mass media may use to report, which are protected and guaranteed under Article 13 of the American Convention and the commission finds that they do not constitute a violation of that treaty ... omissis ... the Commission deems that the importance of the mass media and, in particular, of the work of the reporters do not imply an immunity in relation to possible criticism of the society in general, including those of public officials. On the contrary, as vehicles of social communication, they should be open and set a tolerance margin before the public scrutiny and criticism of the receivers of the information they impart ... omissis ... Therefore, it is evident that within the framework of the public debate in Venezuela, the issue regarding how the mass media do their job is an issue of public debate and then, the criticism and ratings made in this matter by officials or private individuals must be tolerated as long as they do not directly lead to violence Omissis ... the Commission deems that the statements of the officials, despite the fact that they may be shocking, strong, offensive or insensitive ... omissis ... cannot be considered as the State's failure to comply with the duty to respect the right to freedom of expression and opinion, when such right implies exactly its exercise ... omissis ... though they contribute to create an environment of intense discussion and bias of the mass media ... the strong content of the statements cannot be considered a direct cause of the subsequent acts committed to detriment of the employees of Globovisión".

"...omissis ... The Commission took note of the fact that in April 2003, the President of the Republic issued an appeal to respect journalists and treat them with dignity as they deserve".

cameramen, assistants) in that special situation of relative vulnerability¹⁹ inasmuch as it exists only the possibility, which implies that it could or could not happened, coupled with that pursuant to the Commission, most of the statements did not constitute a violation of the Convention. In fact, it was mentioned in the judgment that, even when it does not spring from the declarations that the unfortunate facts that occurred have been attributed to the authorities, neither that the self-identification with the editorial line of Globovisión was a conditio sine qua non lead the petitioners to a situation of vulnerability, the State is necessarily held responsible for the non-compliance with the obligation to guarantee the exercise of the right to freely seek, receive and impart information and the right to personal liberty.

According to the theory of responsibility, the Court pointed out, in the judgment from which I dissent, upon analyzing the influence the alleged victims had on the incidents, that:

"62. The Court recalls that in the instant case, its role is to determine, as an international court of human rights exercising its contentious jurisdiction, the State's responsibility under the American Convention for the alleged violations and not the responsibility of RCTV, or of its managers, shareholders or employees, in relation to certain facts or historical incidents that occurred in Venezuela, nor even their role or performance as a social media. The Court does not determine the rights of RCTV, in its capacity as company, corporation or legal entity. Even if it is true that RCTV or its personnel has committed the acts that the State understands they did, this does not provide a justification for failing to comply with the State's obligation to respect and guarantee human rights. Dissent and different opinions or ideas are consubstantial to the pluralism that must rule in a democratic society.

The questioning regarding the causal link highlighted the need to examine the participation of the victims in the occurrence of the incidents mentioned in the judgment, in order not to try or condemn them, in view of the fact that this Court is not competent to try the civilians of States Parties, but on the contrary, to determine the existence of guilt of the State as well as to determine what lead to that situation of relative vulnerability. It seems appropriate to emphasize that the State produced evidence in this sense and the Court declared it was inadmissible.²⁰

It does not spring from the State's arguments that the State was holding the alleged victims responsible but, on the contrary, it was invalidating the ground for exemption from liability. Unfortunately, the evidence produced to demonstrate this exemption was not admitted, as has been mentioned; however, I believe that it was one of the answers expected during the trial from the alleged victims or the State, within the framework of the social harmony that should result from all judgment in a society or a nation; therefore, there is no possibility to try this ground for exemption from liability.

¹⁹ This concept was first introduced by the Advisory Opinion OC-18/03 of September 17, 2003. Juridical Condition and Rights of the Undocumented Migrants and then judgments in the: Case of the "Maripirán Massacre" V. Colombia. Judgment of September 15, 2005. Para. 174. Case of the Girls Yean and Bosico V. Dominican Republic. Judgment of September 8, 2005

²⁰ Cf. judgment in process (Order) of the President of the Court of March 18, 2008, para. 19 and 28

The foregoing comments and observations in relation to the judgment from which I dissent, are facts that serve as the basis for the questioning about the service of administration of justice and the Venezuelan judicial system mentioned in the judgment in the subsequent subchapter, which deals with, as this subchapter did, the hindrance or inability of some employees of the media to do their jobs (final part of paragraph 160) corroborated by the lack of due diligence, the procedural inactivity, and the delay in the investigations.

Following this line of thought, it should be mentioned that the second subchapter:

a) Evidences the need to have produced the evidence invoked by the State by which it was determined or not the participation of the victims in the events mentioned or "that they took part of acts related to disorderly conducts" (paragraph 154) inasmuch as the representatives denied that the aggressions suffered by the alleged victims were the consequence of their own behavior (paragraph 153), even when, as it was mentioned, the State raised it as ground for exemption of liability.

b) It is surprising to whom dissents, that even when the reason to accumulate the preliminary objection of exhaustion of domestic remedies, was that the analysis of the effectiveness of the investigations done by the State will implicate an evaluation of the defendant in relation to its obligation on the Convention (para. 40), later it is pointed out that the Court will not pronounce regarding the suitability and effectiveness of the measures of protection (para. 155), this declaration is done after I pointed that the order to adopt measures of protection does not show that the State has protected effectively the beneficiaries of these measures (para. 154). This sets evidence on the connection between the facts, the justice system (and inside this one the Venezuelan justice service), and all the above with judgment approved by the majority.

c) Systematically makes an analysis of each one of the facts, and the sentencing majority determined that third parties not related to the government carried out the activities that hindered the alleged victims from doing their jobs; following this line of thought, it concludes that because of the actions of the third parties, the State is not responsible for the violation of the right to humane treatment. Regardless of this consideration, it is expressly mentioned that in most of the cases, there were actions and omissions attributable to the Venezuelan judicial system²¹ and the State did not justify it; for example, it was mentioned that: The Court notes an unwarranted procedural delay; or that there is no evidence proving that the State acted with due diligence in the development of the investigations or at the appropriate procedural time; or that the investigation lasted a certain period of time; or that it was ordered the investigation after certain time; or that the first measure was adopted after a ²¹ "Article 253. The power to administer justice derives from the citizens and is enforced on behalf of the Republic as mandated by law.

The bodies of the Judiciary have the responsibility of hearing the cases and matters according to their jurisdiction, by means of the procedures determined by law and they must enforce and carry out their decisions.

The judicial system is formed by the Supreme Tribunal of Justice, the other courts determined by law, the Attorney General of the Republic, the Public Defender, the criminal investigation divisions, the assistants and officers of justice, the penitentiary system, the alternative means of justice, the citizens who participate in the administration of justice according to the law and the lawyers authorized to practice". The emphasis is mine.

certain number of years; or that no proceeding was instituted or no investigation carried out or that there was delay in such proceeding or investigation; or that no medical-legal evaluation was performed in certain cases; or that there were unwarranted delays in the delivery of certain decisions by the authorities in charge of the criminal prosecution, based on the fact that there was no sufficient evidence in the investigation. (See, paragraphs 167, 172, 183, 187, 191, 195, 199, 215, 220, 224, 228, 232, 236, 240, 244, 248, 252, 256, and 263 of the judgment).

In light of the foregoing, it would seem evident the unremarkably efficiency and effectiveness of the Venezuelan judicial system and as a result, it would seem appropriate the decision contained in the judgment regarding the non-compliance with the duty to guarantee the rights enshrined in Articles 13(1) and 5(1) of the Convention, considering such ineffectiveness. Nevertheless, as shall be analyzed infra, that must not have been a determining factor in the decision.

d) When discussing, in this subchapter, the violation of the mental and moral integrity of the alleged victims, even when the Court disregards the expert examination represented by the psychological evaluation made by Magdalena López, it determines – presumably, based on the experience inasmuch as there is no evidence that would allow to scientifically come to the conclusion of the sentencing majority- that, by virtue of the fact that the alleged victims were subjected to hindrances, aggressions, threats, acts of harassment and intimidation during their jobs, the State is responsible of the obligation to guarantee the right to mental and moral integrity of the victims mentioned. (Paragraph 273). I presume that this decision was made because the State exposed the alleged victims to a situation of relative vulnerability as well as due to the lack of effectiveness of the system and the Venezuelan judiciary. Considering that there is no reasoning for the conclusion that the sentencing majority came to, we must ratify that the causal link is very weak or nonexistent as has been analyzed supra.

Lastly and following the order mentioned, I note in the third subchapter that:

a) It highlights to whom dissent, that the Court after analyzing the arguments of the State where other existing legal actions were referred (para. 286) concludes that the parties have emphasized in the controversy taken to this Court in the denounces and investigations, resulting in an analysis regarding the existing resources inside the legal grounds (in paragraph 291), to a point of trying to assume that the control of the actions of Comisión Nacional de Telecomunicaciones (CONATEL) had to be done before the Public Ministry.

I ratify what is said supra regarding the non existence of congruency between the pretensions brought before the Inter-American System of protection and the domestic remedies that had to be exhausted in order to access it; for a judge acting in legal competence in Venezuela cannot pronounce in the regard that if CONATEL denounced actions violated or not the freedom of expression, and declare the victims as injured. These actions are up for revision through the actions and administrative contentious resources in the Venezuelan juridical order or through constitutional actions.

b) By considering that the criminal proceedings were not suitable or sufficient, as has been pointed out supra, the Court only analyzed the efficiency and effectiveness of the criminal proceedings to prove – mistakenly, in my opinion- that if the State's organs acted according to the terms of the COPP (Basic Code of Criminal Procedure)²² the results of this case would be different.

c) The judgment even analyzes the lack of action on the part of the State during the criminal proceedings to conclude that such inactivity led to a detrimental act for the victims. In fact, it was mentioned that the Attorney General's Office had to request the dismissal of the complaints in case that after the opening of the investigation, it was determined that the facts of this case constituted a crime that needed to be prosecuted at the request of a party, in accordance with section 301 of the COPP of 2001. It is necessary to emphasize that two sections of that instrument are in conflict with this decision: sections 24 and 25.²³ To base the decision to condemn the State²⁴ on the inactivity of the Attorney General's Office by not having requested the dismissal according to section 301 ejusdem, means not doing a full interpretation of the code in question and not understanding that the private individuals should have, in that situation and according to the two sections mentioned, directly resorted to the judicial authorities.

Moreover, this requirement is also based (paragraph 301 and 302) on the mistaken interpretation of section 75 of the COPP,²⁵ by understanding from that, the burden that lies on the State to produce all the measures of evidence necessary and to investigate the complaints with due diligence, concluding that the judicial authorities did not decide on the application of the rules on connection, neither they delivered decisions, except for some cases, that clarified whether the channel chosen was the appropriate one (paragraph 303). The truth is that said section deals with the ancillary jurisdiction for the case in which a same person is held responsible for the commission of a publicly actionable crime and a crime prosecutable at the request of a party, determining that the case shall be heard by the court competent to try the publicly actionable crime and the rules of ordinary procedure shall govern. The rule does not establish the proceeding that the State should institute but the way in which the procedural matter should be resolved if a person is held responsible for the commission of two crimes of different nature.

²² Cf. para. 310 to 312 of the judgment from which I dissent.

"Section 25. Offenses that can be prosecuted in a private suit. The victim can only institute the actions resulting from crimes that the law establishes as offenses prosecutable in a private suit. Moreover, the prosecution shall be conducted pursuant to the special procedure regulated by this Code.

Nevertheless, for those offenses that can be prosecuted in a private suit as established in Chapters I, II and III, Title VIII, Second Book of the Criminal Code, it would be enough the accusation brought before the Public Prosecutor Office or before the competent police division of criminal investigations, made by the victim or its legal representatives or guardians, if the victim were incompetent, without prejudice to the terms established by special laws".

Where the victim is not able to bring an accusation or suit by itself, due to its age or mental condition, or if the victim has no legal representation, or if such representation is not competent, the Attorney General's Office has the obligation to institute the criminal action. The pardon, dismissal or waiver of the victim shall end the proceeding, unless the victim was a minor (less than 18 years of age).

²⁴ Para. 304 of the judgment from which I dissent.

When a same person is responsible for the commission of a publicly actionable crime and a crime prosecutable at the request of the aggrieved party, the case shall be heard by the court competent to try the publicly actionable crime and the rules of ordinary procedure shall govern".

d) The sentencing majority concludes that the investigations did not constituted an effective means to guarantee the right to humane treatment and the right to seek, receive and impart information of the alleged victims (paragraphs 330 and 331); therefore, it was determined that the State is responsible for the non-compliance with Articles 13(1) and 5(1) in conjunction with Article 1(1) of the Convention, in light of the fact that the State led reporters to a situation of relative vulnerability (with a weak or nonexistent causal link as has been emphasized supra), which derived in a hindrance for the reporters to exercise their profession and the omission of State's authorities to carry out the investigations with due diligence (paragraph 334).

The foregoing conclusion makes us think about the responsibility of the State for the delivery of public services, including the Venezuelan judicial system and in this way, validate the conclusion at which the majority of the judges arrived. Thus, in short, it is the public judicial system what is being analyzed by this Court and it is this issue on which the fundamental reasoning of this judgment was based. Ultimately, the judicial system in Venezuela is required to have a very high, general and uniform standard.

The first thing that must be taken into account, in my opinion, is the nature of the service under question, the improvements and the difficulties entailed and what is needed for its development. Once the foregoing has been verified, it is possible to establish whether the system works poorly or with delay or if it simply did not work at all. The judgment made no analysis in that respect.

Likewise, regarding the requirements for the admissibility of the state responsibility, it is important to emphasize the requirement related to the damage.

It is necessary to mention, with accountability, that as to the damage, the instant case did not represent a special or abnormal damage.

It is not special because the omissions and delays determined by the Court are not addressed at the alleged victims only, inasmuch as, unfortunately, the delay and other judicial deficiencies are common to all the members of the Venezuelan community. The State has made efforts to solve the problems of the judicial system and, in some cases, it had successfully remedied the situation. In fact, there are satisfactory results as to the labor reform with the entry into force of the Organic Law of Labor Procedure of the year 2002; nevertheless, as to the criminal matters are involved, in spite of the entry into force of the Organic Code of Procedure in the year 1998 (together with the subsequent reforms), the results have not been so successful, maybe because it is the jurisdiction that had historically tried more cases in the country.

Consequently, the damage under analysis in this case is neither abnormal, inasmuch as it does not have more than the usual problems inherent to the functioning of a public service, as is the Venezuelan justice or the limitations imposed on the collective life. Definitely, it does not exceed the obstacles typical of the service.

These comments are not intended to justify the way in which the Venezuelan judicial system works and the consequences it had in the instant case. Though this is not my intention, I have to mention insofar as were at the presence of human rights. It must be observed that these points were not taken into account to base the decision made in the judgment, let alone to catalogue what a reasonable term or due diligence means in relation to the investigation, inasmuch as it was established that the State failed to comply with the obligation to ensure the exercise of the right to seek, receive and impart information and the right to humane integrity because the investigations did not contribute to or constitute an effective means to guarantee the right to humane treatment and the right to seek, receive and impart information of the alleged victims.

In other words, it is mostly because of the defects of the judicial system (at the criminal jurisdiction, considering that, as has been established at the beginning of this dissenting opinion, the victims did not exhaust other remedies, from which it cannot be inferred the same) that the Venezuelan State is held responsible and this responsibility is attributed to it without having analyzed the necessary grounds to establish the State's responsibility for the system and the judicial service.

Furthermore, it is necessary to emphasize, as mentioned in the judgment, the high level of conflict that existed in Venezuela at the moment of the occurrence of the unfortunate and repudiable facts reported, all of which minimizes the State's responsibility or makes more real the possibility of putting forward the exemption from liability due to the existence of force majeure in the delivery of public utilities.

The undersigned does not wish to conclude with this dissenting opinion without pointing out that the violence that existed in Venezuela during the occurrence of the facts analyzed in the case was deplorable; but it has been proven in the foregoing paragraphs that the domestic courts did not have the opportunity to try to find a solution to the conflict brought to the Court's attention, using its standards, virtues and defects. Only after proving that the proceedings of the State were unsatisfactory or showing that the domestic remedies were not suitable to satisfy the claims is that this matter could have been brought to the jurisdiction of the Inter-American system of protection. Doing the opposite would mean to empty the Venezuelan system of justice.

Based on the foregoing, I feel I have the duty and obligation to dissent from the judgment and I hereby present my opinion with the utmost respect for those who have a different point of view.

It is expressed, in this way, my reasoning to support my dissenting opinion in this case. Date ut-supra .
